Project Summary: This is the first systematic and comprehensive philosophical exploration of contemporary terrorism and responses to it. It will test the theoretical approaches - realism, consequentialism, just war theory, and pacifism - and provide an account of all major conceptual and moral issues: the nature of terrorism and how it differs from other types of political violence, war, and guerrilla war; the distinctive traits of contemporary terrorism; whether states can, and do, employ terrorism; whether terrorism can ever be morally justified and, if so, under what circumstances; the moral constraints on counterterrorist measures taken by states, coalitions of states, and the world community.
